THE IDIOT. The circumstance related in the following ballad hop-pened some years since in Herefordshire. IT had pleas'd God to form poor Ned .

A thing of idiot mind ... Yet to the poor unreasining man God had not been unkind!

Old Sarah lov'd her helpless child, Whom helplelliness made dear, And life was happiness to him, Who had no hope nor fear.

She knew his wants, the understood, Each half artic'late call, And he was ev'ry thing to her, And the to him was all.

And fo for many a year they dwelt, Nor, knew a wish beside, But age at length on-Sarah came; And she fell fick and died.

He tried in vain to waken her, And call'd her o'er and o'er; They told him flie was dead-the found To him no import Bore.

They clos'd her eyes and throuded her And he flood wond'ring by.
And when they bore her to the grave He follow'd filently.

They laid her in the narrow house, They fung the fun'ral flave; But when the fun!ral train dispers'd He loiter'd by the grave.

The rabble boys, who us'd to jeer Whene'er they faw poor Ned, Now flood and watch'd him at the grave, And not a word they faid.

They came and went, and came again, Fill night at laft came on, and Hill-he loner d by the grave, Till all to rest were gone. And when he found himfelf alone, He fwift remov'd the clay, And raised the coffin up in hafte, And bore It swift away.

And when he reach'd his but he laid The coffin on the floor, And with the eagerness of joy He barr'd the cottage door.

And out he took his mother's corple; And plac'd it in her chair, And then he heapt the hearth, and blew The kindling fire with care.

He plac'd his mother in her chair; And in her wonted place, And blew the kindling fire, that shone Reflected on her tace:

And pauling now, her hand would feel, And now her face behold, Why, mother, do you look fo pale, "And why are you to cold?"

It had pleas'd God from the poor wretch His only friend to call, But God was kind to him, and foon In death restor'd him all:
